Why choose a Dealership for your service needs...

At Toyota dealerships, the Technicians are manufacturer-trained, meaning that they have earned special certifications with your vehicle's brand. It also means they are familiar with the specific make and model of your car. Furthermore, they receive ongoing training to keep them prepared for the evolution of changing technology. Unlike at an independent repair shop, dealership technicians work on vehicles like yours daily.

Non-dealership service teams may only see vehicles like yours once a month.

Genuine Toyota OEM Parts

Another benefit to going to dealership service departments is that your car will receive genuine OEM parts. These parts ensure the best quality and fit for your car. This is because they are the same ones your vehicle came with off the assembly line. On top of this, if you're thinking of reselling your car down the road, OEM parts can increase the resale value.

At independent repair shops, they often use aftermarket parts. These are replicas of OEM parts built by third-party manufacturers. While they are less expensive, they may also suffer in terms of quality and fit.
